

Fair Trade Coffee

- Agricultural prices are low because there is overproduction.

- To solve overproduction, only the most efficient farmers should remain in business.

- The market mechanism ensures that only those with lower costs (the most efficient) remain in business.

- If prices are held artificially high, farmers will not have an incentive to leave this industry and find alternatives.

- Fair trade prices perpetuate the surplus...not so good for the farmers after all.

Fair Trade Coffee

- Agricultural prices are low because there is overproduction.
- To solve overproduction, only the most efficient farmers should remain in business.
- The market mechanism ensures that only those with lower costs (the most efficient) remain in business.
- If prices are held artificially high, farmers will not have an incentive to leave this industry and find alternatives.
- Fair trade prices perpetuate the surplus...not so good for the farmers after all.

Governments in poor Third World countries