In an office

Are pens, markers, staplers, scissors intermediate goods? Or Capital goods? The owner still has these after providing her/his services... Government accountants apply an arbitrary rule to separate Intermediate goods (not included) from capital goods (included):

Any good that has a lifetime exceeding 1 year which will depreciate over time is considered a capital good

If the stapler do not last a year, it is considered intermediate.

If the pen lasts more than a year, it is considered Capital.

In an office

- Are pens, markers, staplers, scissors intermediate goods? Or Capital goods? The owner still has these after providing her/his services...
- Government accountants apply an arbitrary rule to separate Intermediate goods (not included) from capital goods (included):
- Any good that has a lifetime exceeding 1 year which will depreciate over time is considered a capital good
- If the stapler do not last a year, it is considered intermediate.
- If the pen lasts more than a year, it is considered Capital.

Investment