Measuring Prices

• The Consumer Price Index (CPI) measures inflation as experienced by consumers in their day-to-day living expenses • The Producer Price Index (PPI) measures inflation at earlier stages of the production process

The Employment Cost Index (ECI) measures inflation in labor costs

• The BLS International Price Program measures price changes for imports and exports

• The Gross Domestic Product Deflator (GDP Deflator) measures inflation experienced by both consumers themselves as well as governments and other institutions providing goods and services to consumers.

Measuring Prices

- The Consumer Price Index (CPI) measures inflation as experienced by consumers in their day-to-day living expenses
- The Producer Price Index (PPI) measures inflation at earlier stages of the production process
- The Employment Cost Index (ECI) measures inflation in labor costs
- The BLS International Price Program measures price changes for imports and exports
- The Gross Domestic Product Deflator (GDP Deflator) measures inflation experienced by both consumers themselves as well as governments and other institutions providing goods and services to consumers.

58

Inflation Rate in the United States since 1870

